PERSONAL AND SOCIETY.

[All society and personal notes for the Sunday issue of the Journal, to secure publication, must be sent to the city editor by Saturday noon.]

The usual midsummer quiet, in a social way, denotes that a majority of the people who entertain are seeking their pleasure elsewhere than at home. The society notes from the watering places are numerous, and page after page of the Eastern journals are given up to the records of the social world at Newport, Narragansett, Lenox, Mount Desert and the hundred other charming resorts on the sea-coast and in the mountains. Indianapolitans can get their whifis of fresh water and a walk through the glens, but salt water and high peaks have to be sought for miles away. There are hundreds who have to stay at home for the lack of some place to go that does not take hours and dollars to reach. does not take hours and dollars to reach. The remark is frequently heard, "I would go away for a fortnight or three weeks, if it did not take so much to get anywhere." Much, of course, means money. People of this inland city would patronize a resort near the city, if they had it, and that they would do so is shown by the numerous parties that go to Fairview Park each day and take their lunches. Every evening the cars are crowded with gay parties that have been out on excursions. There cannot be hereabouts the temptation of a clam dinner, but there might be something equally as enticing arranged by some enterprising individual. What Indianapolis has needed for years is a place for an outing, and slowly but surely places for outings there will be. Where there is a demand there will be a supply.

After a piano has been purchased, one of the questions is, "What shall we have for a cover." Often the dealer settles that matter by "throwing in" a cover with the instrument, and it frequently hastens the sale. The common plush arrangement, with its applique of tinsel, and silk, and chenille, is an abomination, created ordinarily by some apprentice who has no more eye for color or harmony of tints than a person born blind. The most gaudy shades glare at each other like cats at dogs, and pink leaves and green roses with gold stems, reverse the order of nature with brilliant variations. The discord of color vies with the efforts of the embryo artist. The old-fashioned wool squares with an embroidered border were marvels of taste beside this style. The and drapes of china silk and some of the exquisite embroidered materials which are being introduced are as much of an improvement as one could desire in this day of decorative art work, and there is cause for thankfulness. One of the most unique, appropriate and artistic covers for an upright piano is the original design of the lady in this city who had part of it made by a famous designer, after her own order. The combination the owner made herself. There is a cover of satin. which falls about two-thirds of a yard over the front and sides of the piano, and it is slashed at the corners, leaving the sides to fall smoothly down. The front is draped up at each corner and tied with ribbon, and bordering the whole is a handsome fringe. Across the front is a band of piush, and on it is a 'staff' made of gold thread. Signature and time-mark are embroidered on it with the notes to the words "There's no place like home." The notes are the artistic achievement. They are of bolting cloth daintily painted, fashioned like angels. The head and wings make the body of the note and the flowing araperies its stem. No two are alike and yet there is which falls about two-thirds of a yard over its stem. No two are alike and yet there is such a similarity, that there is not the slightest incongruity of outline. The fine embroidery which unites the whole is quite as admirable as the design.
